Mexico Chapter

CultureBound was honored to lead five days of training for the ELIM team, equipping them to use CultureBound's training materials to multiply new missionaries from Mexico and Latin America.

Mark and Karen Hedinger were at Rancho El Camino outside of La Paz, Baja California, Mexico from April 21 – 28. The purpose was to work with a mission training outreach that is just getting started. The mission training center is called ELIM, meaning Equipando Lideres e Iglesias para Misiones (Equipping Leaders and Churches for Mission).

This multiplication is at the heart of CultureBound Chapters, the initiative that we began a few months ago to multiply mission trainers around the world.

The results of the trip are so very encouraging!

- We see a long, healthy partnership between CultureBound and ELIM.
- We are excited to partner together to train Latin American missionaries who are leaving their homes to go to unreached and under-churched parts of the world.
- We envision a network of mission training centers which use CultureBound's approaches and which encourage one another through online interaction.

With great thanks to those who gave toward the beginning of Chapters development, we also see how vital it is that CultureBound has on-going financial support to allow us to equip other training Chapters around the world. We are in discussion with mission organizations in various nations. The opportunities are abundant. But in order to take advantage of these open doors, CultureBound's funding will need to increase.
